THURSDAY EVENING, NOV. 28, 1878.

Bissolution of Man.

[Written for the Alexandria Gazette.] How frail is life ; how short the date, Precarious, void, uncertain state. Of abject, mortal man! We bustle through a world of strife, Augment the miseries of life,

While ie the wild pursuit we'er warm To catch the shadow's cupty form, We are summoned hence away; The spirit mounts above the skies, Thro' fields of rether daring flies, Far from the lifeless clay.

And stretch it to a span.

For this created body must Be blended with its kindred dust, And leave its terrene frame ; Its memory lost to human kind, For what will mark the man resigned? A tombstone, and a name.

A scanty tract of mother earth, Immurez the prince of noblest birth. Becomes his lowly throne; While some kind bard engraves his name, His virtuous deeds, his power, his fame, On monumental stone.

But as like man, all things decay, Wealth, glory, kingdoms melt away, And leave no traces near; So when old time has been his round, No marks of tomb, or grave are found,

Or king or slave appear. How doubtful is life! a gasp of air, A pulso omitted mocks our care, And bounds our mortal state The spirit wings its rapid flight To regions of darkness or of light. Through death's all-ending gate.

Went farther and fared werse is often heard, but too late; could have done much better at Dealham's.

Read this, it will well pay you: We have opened the second lot of cloaks, just purchased, and are free to say that such in quality and price was never, no never, seen, cr will be seen again. Ladies call and see what we are doing. We will astopish you. As we have several hundred cloaks cheaper than the cloth can be bought for. Call! Call! Call! at I.
